HUNTING IN SCOTLAND: ALLADALE LODGE

A luxurious all inclusive retreat in the Scottish Highlands with Red Deer Stalking

years to a time when wolves once roamed free and the hills were comprised of original Caledonian woodland. To this end the estate runs a very careful Red Deer management programme with a view to maintaining the deer numbers at a level where a natural balance is restored. The estate has two dedicated stalkers who will look after guests whilst out on the hill and each man can look after parties of two at a time. In traditional Victorian fashion, on completion of a successful stalk highland ponies are used to help carry deer off the hill.

Alladale offers a unique opportunity to stay in the comfort of a private, luxurious highland lodge in the magnificent setting of one of Europe's most spectacular wilderness reserves. You will have the opportunity to enjoy many activities and traditional highland pursuits by day, before returning to the lodge where a dedicated staff await with roaring log fires, fine food, drinks and many other additional comforts you may desire.

Originally established as a sporting lodge in 1877, the lodge has recently readjusted its focus away from that of a straightforward Highland stalking lodge to one which combines both the traditional sporting ethos as well as a conservational approach with a forward-looking goal of 'restoring the balance of nature'.

The Red Deer Stalking

The estate has established itself as a wilderness reserve with a view to helping regenerate the entire ecosystem, taking it back many hundreds of

Alladale Lodge

Set amidst 23,000 acres of majestic scenery on the borders of Sutherland and Ross-shire, Alladale Lodge is a magnificent informal private escape. Alladale should appeal not just to sportsmen but also to family and friends seeking an invigorating taste of the Scottish Highlands combined with the comfort afforded by a luxurious Highland lodge. Alladale has recently been completely redecorated to the highest standards by Laura Ashley. Your surroundings will be inspiring throughout your stay whether you are looking out from the lodge with its inspiring views of the glens and mountains, relaxing in your room or by a roaring log fire, enjoying a spa or sharing a glass of wine around the gleaming dining room table. All you have to do is provide the company.

The Service

The lodge has a permanent staff of 14 who will be on hand to look after all your needs and act as guides throughout your stay. The head stalker comes from a family which has worked on the estate for 3 generations. His knowledge of the land is unmatched and he will provide you with memories from the hill spanning successive generations. The resident chef prepares meals to the highest standard, using the freshest local, seasonal and organic ingredients possible, all of which will be carefully served and accompanied by a selection of fine wines.

Location and Environment

Alladale is situated at the narrowest part of the British Isles; on a clear day from one of the peaks on the estate it is possible to see both the Atlantic Ocean and the North Sea. Its position on the eastern side of the watershed means it also enjoys a favourable microclimate, receiving a lower than average annual rainfall.
